Hitting form

Although in transition after high-profile player departures, Borussia Dortmund (BVB) continues to compete well on all fronts. Its financial performance is similarly spirited with a near doubling in H1 pre-transfer EBITDA, driven by the Champions League. However, costs remain an issue, so we are maintaining our full-year pre-transfer EBITDA forecast despite better than expected progress in Europe. Apart from a new deal on Bundesliga media rights, FY18 should benefit from a significantly lower player cost base, hence our €8m EBITDA upgrade and forecast bumper cash generation (over €100m net cash at June 2018), which provides ample scope for profitable investment and returns to shareholders.

H1: Solid profit recovery

Fortunes were predictably buoyed by renewed Champions League access, so, while positive, rises of 18% and 72% in pre-transfer revenue and EBITDA, respectively, should be seen against a weak Europa League comparative (H116 pre-transfer EBITDA down 59% y-o-y). Aside from the Champions League broadcasting boost, revenue was broadly flat in advertising, merchandising and match operations, reflecting in part fewer home UEFA games. Labour costs from the renewed squad were up 18% in the period, slightly higher than we expected.

FY18 lower labour costs may not be wishful thinking

The changes to our forecasts, detailed on page 2, relate mainly to labour costs, which we now envisage up by c 25% in H217, as in Q2. This offsets the likely benefit from reaching an extra round (quarter-finals) of the Champions League, which drives our €17m full-year revenue upgrade. By contrast, labour costs may fall next year owing to a planned pruning of the squad (28 players of whom only 10 have started even half of this season's matches). On current playing assumptions, we look for 7% lower labour costs and c €40m proceeds from associated transfers. Our forecast FY18 PBT reflects transfer gains, which are notional but reasonable, given the company's record and surplus of market value to net player assets (c €220m if the December 2016 carrying value of €160m is set against the current www.transfermarkt.de valuation of €378m).

Valuation: All to play for

The market's continuing appreciation of Dortmund rebuilding is justified in terms of potential trading profit break-out and significant transfer gains. However, with Champions League predicating our FY18 forecast, there is little room for Bundesliga slippage as BVB is now only narrowly in qualifying position.
